

MOST PHASE 4 REOPENING PLANS

SYRACUSE, NY (June 26, 2020) - The Milton J. Rubenstein Museum of Science and Technology (MOST) is gradually reopening to the public as part of NYS Phase 4.

The MOST will be open every weekday for summer day-camps beginning Monday, June 29, and running until Friday, August 21 with pre-registration. More information here: <https://www.most.org/learn/camps/>.

Our projected reopen date is August 1, 2020, for weekends only but is subject to change with the start of NYS Phase 4 reopen. The MOST will continue to evaluate and consult our reopening with city and county officials to ensure the safety of our visitors and staff and relay this information via email, website, and social media.

"We are so excited to be reopening for camps in June, and look forward to a full reopen on August 1," said Lauren Kochian, President of the MOST. "MOST employees resumed work on June 22 and will be putting new exhibits and programs on the floor that are less hands-on, but just as engaging. We are taking the time to ensure all staff is equipped and retrained in our enhanced sanitation procedures and other safety measures."

The MOST plans to fully reopen at the end of summer with resumed hours and new programs and exhibits for the fall.

As a science-based organization, we believe we are taking every measure necessary to keep our community safe and will continue to make decisions through the Onondaga County Health Department, New York State Department of Health, and CDC to ensure the ultimate safety of our visitors and staff.
